

Today's Speaker

Mark W. Montgomery, DMD, FACA

Mark. W Montgomery, DMD, has been a prominent dental instructor, innovator and educator for the past 30 years. A fellow in the Academy of Comprehensive Aesthetics, he has lectured and taught extensively at dental association conferences and study clubs throughout the country regarding a variety of functional and aesthetic topics, as well as dentomandibular sensorimotor function and dysfunction. He also has developed integrated systems to manage pain, headaches, temporomandibular joint disorders and force managed occlusion. He has taught thousands of dentists to use well-defined systems to enhance their clinical excellence.

Dr. Montgomery is well known for his mastery of skills in the areas of Invisalign orthodontics, smile enhancement and veneers, reconstruction and restoration of worn and damaged teeth, and in controlling tooth grinding, dentomandibular sensorimotor dysfunction, and head/face pain. His greatest talents are in the area of comprehensive diagnosis of complex problems.

Dr. Montgomery has been committed to excellent patient care since graduating from Oregon Health Sciences University. An author who has contributed to published dental literature, his experience in all aspects of dental care has been enhanced by extensive work in continuing dental education. This background has built a strong commitment to comprehensive health grounded in beautiful smiles, excellent chewing function, and a health/biological focus.

ADDING DENTAL HEADACHE CARE TO YOUR PRACTICE

Now is the time for dentistry to embrace dental headache care and provide relief and therapy for the pain symptoms associated with the head, neck and dentofacial area. With the research and technology that has been developed for and proven effective in other disciplines, such as sports medicine and rehabilitation, dentist are now well positioned to help patients suffering with the debilitating symptoms of dentomandibular sensorimotor dysfunction and dental headaches. Greater understanding of the mechanisms that exacerbate and/or cause pain in the face, head, oral environment, and the joints and muscles in these areas, which are all connected via the trigeminal nerve pathway, allows dentist to incorporate proven assessment and treatment modalities into their practice to provide predictable and much needed care. This presentation will educate attendees about current developments regarding assessments and treatments for dentomandibular sensorimotor dysfunction, as well as how they can incorporate a systematic approach for treating dental headaches into their practices.

Learning Objectives:

*Describe the demographics and potential patient population that could benefit from the availability of dental headache care

*Discuss the symptoms and conditions associated with dentomandibular sensorimotor dysfunction and dental headaches

*Explain the musculature and central neurology involved with dentomandibular sensorimotor dysfunction and dental headaches

*Discuss the rationale for a systematic approach to rehabilitating the dentomandibular area as a means for relieving dental headache pain

*Explain the possible impacts to a practice of providing objective dental headache Assessments and treatments to patients suffering with painful symptoms of dentomandibular sensorimotor dysfunction
